ABOUT JUGLONE TOXICITY

Black walnut trees produce a chemical called "juglone" that occurs naturally in all parts of the plant. Juglone leeches into the soil surrounding the tree, with the highest concentration occurring directly under the tree's canopy. Many plants are sensitive to juglone, and if affected, will show signs ranging from wilting, to stunted growth, to eventual death. Juglone toxicity can occur for several years after a black walnut tree is removed. If you are landscaping and have a black walnut tree (or recently removed one), your best option is to choose plants that are juglone tolerant.
